Political Science & Law School Preparation

Critical thinking skills are essential for admission to law and for success in law school. Political Science is geared toward critical thinking skills and is the most popular pre-law major. Political Science students take courses in law, political institutions and processes, and political philosophy such as Constitutional Law, the Judicial Process, and American Political Thought. These courses are rigorous in the areas of reading, writing, and logical thinking that are critical to succeed in both the LSAT and Law School.
